Myra Mathis, MD, is a senior instructor of psychiatry and an addiction psychiatrist at the University of Rochester Medical Center. An undergraduate and medical school alum of the University of Rochester, Dr. Mathis trained in general adult and addiction psychiatry at Yale University Department of Psychiatry. She currently sees patients clinically at Strong Recovery - an outpatient dual diagnosis clinic which houses an Opioid Treatment Program and provides a full complement of addiction and psychiatric services. Nationally, Dr. Mathis serves as Co-Chair for the Opioid Response Network Black Communities Workgroup, promoting effective utilization and dissemination of culturally responsive technical assistance for Black Communities disproportionately affected by the overdose crisis. As a clinician-educator, Dr. Mathis facilitates educational experiences for medical students, residents, and fellows in addiction psychiatry and pursues academic interests in advancing health equity and racial justice through scholarship and the development of collaborative community partnerships.

The ACAAM National Addiction Medicine Didactic Curriculum is a weekly, fellowship-run didactic experience. While designed by and for the addiction medicine subspecialty, the content will improve the practice of any physician or fellow treating or assessing patients with substance use disorder.
